

Preaching the Baptist Distinctives: Nine Sermons on What Baptists Believe

The Baptist distinctives taken together are what set Baptists apart from other Christians. Therefore, no belief that is held by all Christians should be named as a Baptist distinctive. This is an important point, because some teachings set Christians apart from all other religious people. These "Christian distinctives" are known as the fundamentals. All true Christians affirm (or at least, refuse to deny) all the fundamentals. Because Baptists are Christians, they also believe the fundamentals. Non-Baptists such as Methodists and Presbyterians also affirm the fundamentals, for they too are Christians. People who deny fundamental doctrines cannot rightly be called Methodist or Presbyterian any more than they can be called Baptist. The fundamentals are the common property of all true Christians, whether Baptist, Lutheran, Calvinist or Wesleyan. Therefore, a fundamental doctrine is not really a Baptist distinctive, even though all Baptists will believe it. On the other hand, we must not say that only Baptists hold any of the Baptist distinctives. Baptists are characterized by several beliefs. Not one of those beliefs, however, is absolutely unique to Baptists. No matter which one you choose, you can find other groups that acknowledge it. No single doctrine by itself is sufficient to distinguish Baptists from all other groups of Christians.

What makes Baptists different is that they alone hold the combination of beliefs that are known as the Baptist distinctives. Each individual belief is held by some other group, but no other group holds the whole bundle. Baptists are distinguished, not by the individual teachings, but by the combination of teachings that make up the Baptist distinctives.
